The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

TOWN COUNCIL MEETING

Council Chamber,
September 2nd, 1919.

The regular meetin gof the Council was held in the Council Chamber on Tuesday night.

Present—Mayor Robinson, Reeve Graham, and Councillors Boyes, Lowry, McGregor and Steacy.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved of.

A communication was received from the Water Works Co., informing the Council that the extension of the main to a point opposite the Driving Park was completed August 15th, and the cost would be billed to the town.

From the Fire Underwriters Association re increase in insurance rates upon the town of Napanee. The Underwriters claim an increase of 10c to the Fire Rate was made for business in Napanee in April, 1918, on account of a report made by the Fire Inspector on the fire preventative appliance of the town. The Council claims the defect in the fire fighting appliance has been remedied and the excess rate should be discontinued.

From Wm. Light, tendering for the market tolls at $190.00 a year. The Clerk was instructed to notify him that the tender for the present incumbent would not expire for some time.

On motion the matter of the Cartwright taxes was left in the hands of the Finance Committee to bring in a report.

The Town Property Committee reported that nothing could be done, re Loyst reward, the solicitor holding the opinion that possession was nine points of the law.

On motion Reeve Graham, the Street Commissioner, was instructed to repair Bridge St., near Union, the cost not to exceed $10.00.

On motion the sewer on the Camden road will be lowered two feet to meet the sewer leading to the Farmers' Dairy Co. The tender was given to the Madole Hardware Co., at $70.00.

Mr. J. N. Osborne asked for a grant to the band to help in the purchase of instruments.

On motion $60.00 was granted.

Mr. W. D. Midmer complained to the Council, through letter, that the walk in front of his residence was in a bad condition.

On motion the sidewalk was ordered repaired.

Kimmerly's orchestra asked for the use of the Town Hall on Tuesday night next.

On motion the hall was rented to the orchestra on condition that their entertainment would not start before 10.30.

Moved by Reeve Graham, seconded by Coun. Lowry, that standard time for the town be resumed on Sept. 7th, at midnight. Carried.

The following accounts were ordered paid :

Point Ann Quarries.....	$ 45 00
Chas Stevens, fuel for poor.....	26 00
U. M. Wilson, legal services.....	5 00
E. J. Pollard, printing....	47 67

An account of $24.00 for insurance on Town Hall, also one from Chas. Stevens for coal $276.50 was referred to committees.

The Council adjourned until Friday night at 7.30 sharp, to consider the Waterworks question.

LENNOX COUNTY FAIR

The Big New Fair Tuesday and Wednesday Next.

It has been said, and quite truly too, that the amount of success of any undertaking depends entirely upon the amount of enthusiasm the promoters of said undertaking put into it. If that is true the Lennox Fall Fair is an assured success, for the promoters have been hustling day and night for the past three or four months to make the Lennox Fair one of the best in this part of Ontario.

In the first place, the Napanee Driving Park, where the Lennox Fair will be held hereafter, is one of the most beautiful and natural parks in Canada, and is an ideal spot for holding a fair.

In the second place, the new buildings erected in the park this summer for fall fair purposes, are large and commodious, and will have all the necessary conveniences needed by exhibitors, and will be brilliantly lighted by electricity. They have cost a heap of money, but the promoters are leaving nothing undone to put them in proper shape.

In the third place the prize list is a large one, and the prizes offered well worth trying for, to say nothing of the extra large number of valuable special prizes offered. This spells success as far as the exhibits are concerned.

In the fourth place the attractions at the Lennox Fair this year will surpass anything ever witnessed in Napanee. The public can make no mistake by attending the fair either day, as there is an excellent programme provided for both days.

Excellent Horse Races.
Interesting Base Ball Games.
A Wet Tug of War.
Fancy Drills.
Tractor Plowing Demonstrations.
Biz Midway Shows.
Splendid Music.

To say nothing of the thousand and one other attractions which are usually to be seen at an up-to-date fall fair.

Who will be the lucky farmer to win the beautiful lamp, donated by Boyle & Son, for the most beautifully decorated automobile?

The Baby Show on the evening of Sept. 9th, will be a hummer, as the excellent prizes offered will be sure to bring out a large number of competitors.

Boost the Lennox Fair.

Come both days.

Bring along your lunch and enjoy a beautiful day's recreation at the Napanee Driving Park on both fair days.

WILTON.

The death occurred on Saturday night of Miss Annie J. Longmore, at her residence in the township of Sheffield, aged 67 years. Miss Longmore, who was seventy-seven years of age, had gone out early in the morning to milk the cattle. While thus engaged, a cow kicked her, causing injuries from which she died six hours later. Miss Longmore, deceased was one of the best known and most highly esteemed residents of the township, having resided there all her life. In religion she was a Presbyterian. Surviving are one brother, Robert W. Longmore, of the township for some years, and two sisters, Mrs. Thomas Dunwoody, of Newburgh, and Mrs. Dunwoody, of Deseronto. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon, and the remains were laid to rest in the family plot at Cataraqui cemetery.

THE PRINCE INVESTS IN WAR SAVINGS STAMPS.

Not the least among the gracious acts performed by the Prince of Wales, during his brief stay in Ottawa, was to invest in a complete certificate of War-Savings Stamps. His Royal Highness was delighted to find that War-Savings Stamps are on sale similar to those that are so popular in England. It was his intention to call at the Post Office and make his purchase of the stamps in the regular manner, during his stroll up Sparks street, but pressure of other engagements prevented this being done. The Stamps were therefore sent to him at Government house, and the sale, duly made, in cash, by the Secretary of the National War Savings Committee. The Prince was quite willing that his investment should be made known and kindly sent the following letter, with permission to publish it, to Sir Herbert B. Ames, Chairman of the National War Savings Committee.

Government House, Ottawa,
1st September, 1919.

Dear Sir Herbert :

"I am pleased to be the holder of a Canadian War Savings Certificate. I want to find that in Canada you have War Savings Stamps on sale, similar to those we have in England. I wish the War Savings campaign every success.

I remain,
Yours sincerely,
(Signed) Edward P."

The Youngest Major.

Major W. M. Nickle, aide-de-camp to Gen. Sir Richard Turner, who recently returned to Canada, has the distinction of being probably the youngest major in the Canadian Corps, for he is just 22. He is a son of the member of Parliament for Kington, and enlisted in March, 1915, as a private in the 21st P.P.C.L.I. He was given his commission on the field, and the following year he was wounded at St. Eloi, and won the Military Cross at Vimy Ridge. He recovered from his wounds in Canada, and rejoined the 21st Battalion in 1917, and was promoted to captain. In the following year he was made aide-de-camp at Argyll House, and given his majority. He now returns to Canada to study law.

Gave Apple to Prince.

OTTAWA, Sept. 2.—An impromptu presentation which was not on the official program of the Prince of Wales' visit, occurred Thursday morning at the little village of Manotick, about 15 miles from the capital. The royal train arrived at Manotick about half an hour ahead of schedule, as was thought advisable to wait there for a short time. His Royal Highness seized the opportunity to have a little chat in the coach, stopping to converse with a number of farmers who were gathered at the station. A little girl, seeing the prince pass, offered him some apples, which his Royal Highness graciously accepted.

Gives Credit to Britain.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Marshal Foch, in a letter of thanks to the British Parliament, says:

"If I was able to bring the war to a speedy conclusion, it was due to the sustained determination of the British Government to reinforce and keep up in 1918 sufficient effectives and give powerful assistance to the transport of American divisions."

GREAT LEADER IS DEAD

Louis Botha Was a Victim of Influenza.

Premier of South Africa Fought Against the British During Boer War, But Subsequently Became a Staunch Supporter of the Empire —Gen. Jan Smuts Succeeds Him.

PRETORIA, South Africa, Sept. 2. —Gen. Louis Botha, Premier and Minister of Agriculture of the Union of South Africa, died suddenly early Thursday morning, following an attack of influenza.

Soldier, statesman, patriot, the late Louis Botha was for the past twenty years an outstanding figure in the affairs of the British Empire. From an armed rebel who led the Transvaal forces in bitter opposition to the British in South Africa, his reputation to Premier of South Africa and to firm allegiance to the Empire he once fought, is marked, yet logically consistent with the nature of the man. To Gen. Botha is due a great share of the credit for South Africa's part during the recent war, and for suppression of the attempted rebellion in the fall of 1914.

Louis Botha was born at Greytown, Natal, in 1863, and was a member of the first Vookstadt of Transvaal in which he represented the district of Vryheid. At the beginning of the Boer War in 1899, he was veldt-cornet for that district. Joining the Boer forces in Northern Natal, he soon rose to high commands. He was in charge of the Boer forces at the Battle of Colenso and Spion Kop, and following the death of Gen. P. J. Joubert, he was made commander-in-chief of Transvaal forces. After the fall of Pretoria he reorganised the Boers with a view to prolonged guerilla warfare but, seeing steady resistance to the British up till late in 1901.

Following the peace negotiations between the Boers and the British, Gen. Botha took a leading role in the period of reconstruction. After the grant of self-government to the Transvaal in 1907, Gen. Botha was called upon to form a government. This honor he resigned in December, 1912, owing to dissension in his Cabinet, but was immediately asked to form a new government. At the outbreak of the Great War in 1914, Gen. Botha took command of the Union forces in Southwest Africa, achieving a complete success and compelling the German troops in that region to surrender. With Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, Gen. Botha signed the peace treaty with Germany on behalf of the Union of South Africa, June 28, last. He arrived in Cape Town from Europe on July 28.

A recent biography said:

Gen. Botha is as remarkable physically as he is mentally. He weighs 230 pounds, in strict training, and is six feet high, is a crack rifle shot, a skilful boxer, and is handsome into the bargain. But despite his immense physique, he is extremely unostentatious, and his suave courtesy is in striking contrast to the brusque manners of the majority of the Boers. His wife, to whom he was married on December 13, 1898, was Miss Annie Emma Emmett, and he has three sons, all of whom were out with him in his recent campaign. The eldest, as a mere lad of twelve or thereabouts, went on commando with his father in the old war.

Lieut.-Gen. Christian Smuts has accepted the invitation of Viscount Buxton, Governor-General of the Union of South Africa, to form a new Cabinet. This is made necessary by the death of Gen. Louis Botha, who had held the office of Premier.

Saw Canadian Crucified.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 2.—About the first St. Catharines man to leave for the front and about the last to get back is the record of Lieut. T. Edward Jones of this city, who got home Friday. He left St. Catharines with the old St. Catharines 7th Battery on August 28, 1914, and saw all the hard fighting the Canadians had.

"I saw the first Canadian they crucified," said he. "He was a sergeant of the 15th Machine Gun Battalion, and it was in April, 1915. There was no support and they drove us back for a mile and a half. The Huns captured this poor fellow and pinned him up to a barn door. They ran one of their sword-like bayonets through his stomach, and they pinned his wrists and legs with Ross rifle Canadian bayonets."

"Do you suppose he was alive when they crucified him?" he was asked.

"I certainly do, because when we got to him he was still bleeding," was the lieutenant's reply.

U. S. Wants More.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2. — An amendment to the peace treaty providing that United States shall have as many representatives as the British Empire on the League of Nations Executive Council was adopted by Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The vote was 9 to 8, Senator McCumber, Republican, North Dakota, standing with the Democrats against the amendment. The provision as framed would not reduce the six votes held by Great Britain and its dominions on the assembly, but would provide that the United States have equal representation.

Denmark Wants British Coal.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 2.—In view of the desperate coal situation a delegation will be sent to England from the Danish Government in the hope that the British authorities may allow an increased amount to be exported.

GENERAL CURRIE AT HOME.

Welcomed to Strathroy, Where He Spent His Boyhood.

STRATHROY, Sept. 2.—Back to his little home town Sunday at noon came the great commander of all the Canadian forces, Gen. Sir Arthur Currie. He was accompanied by Lady Currie.

The general and Lady Currie were escorted from the station by the band and crowds of people to the Armory, where he was presented with an address by Mayor Dunpler, welcoming him on behalf of the council, the Chamber of Commerce and the citizens of Strathroy.

Sir Arthur was very much touched, and could scarcely reply for a few moments. He spoke of how glad he was to meet again his boyhood friends.

Mrs. W. B. Lindsay, mother of Brig.-Gen. W. B. Lindsay; Major Neville Lindsay; Capt. Harry Lindsay, and Capt. Arthur L. Lindsay presented Lady Currie with a beautiful bouquet of roses.

Mr. Edward Rowland, who knew Sir Arthur when he attended the Collegiate here, spoke for a few moments. Postmaster Evans closed the reception with a spirited address of welcome, after which a parade of automobiles was formed and accompanied them to his mother's home on 4th Portsmith Line.

Among those who met him at the station were his aged mother; his brother, Wesson Currie; his two sisters, the Misses Currie, with the latter's wife and child. Gen. Currie's son and daughter had arrived some days before, and are staying here with their grandmother.

WON AERIAL DERBY.

International Race Between Mineola and Toronto.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—Lieut. B. W. Maynard, of the United States Army Air Service won the International Aero Derby between Mineola, N.Y., and Toronto, covering the 1,000-mile round trip course in 466 3/4 minutes, according to official announcement made here by the Contest Committee of the American Flying Club.

Lieut. H. H. George, whose flying time was 520 2/5 minutes, finished second. Lieut. D. B. Gish was third, with a flying time of 524 1/5 minutes.

The Contest Committee said that the winners in the reliability test would be announced on Tuesday.

The three aviators finishing first in the aero-derby were army pilots, who made the flight in the Liberty-plated four machines equipped with 400 horse-power Liberty motors. The planes were entered in order to test the reliability of the American-made army machines.

There were 52 airmen entered in the aero-race. Of these, 23 finished the round trip and three made second starts. Although several of the planes were forced either in landing or getting off, only one pilot suffered an injury in the international flight.

STRIKE AS PROTEST.

Winnipeg Labor Men Call For Release of Leaders.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 2.—Should the Dominion Government fail to grant conditions demanding the release on bail of the eight Winnipeg strike leaders now in the provincial jail awaiting trial on the sedition, unlawful labor throughout Canada will be called upon "to take a holiday" for 24 hours on September 17 to protest against the treatment meted out to these men.

This announcement was made by F. J. Dixon, M.L.A., at a mass meeting held in Winnipeg Rink Sunday under the auspices of the Dominion Labor Party, at which the calling of the industrial conference, to be held at Ottawa at the call of the Dominion Government, is also to be made if the Government turns down the petitions in question.

At the meeting resolutions were unanimously passed calling for the immediate release of the strike leaders on bail, and demanding the repeal of the recent amendments to the Immigration Act.

Arms for Sinn Fein.

DUBLIN, Sept. 2.—Unusual police activity was reported along the coast during the past few days, because police have received information that ammunition and arms for Sinn Feiners were coming to an Irish port, consigned as part of an ordinary cargo, on a foreign vessel. It is thought the port of call of the vessel is known to the authorities, and that the coast guards around Ireland have received special instructions in the matter.

H.R.H. AT THE CAPITAL

Laid Corner Stone of the Parliament Buildings.

Prince of Wales Was Not Overwhelmed by Ceremonial Functions During His Stay at Ottawa, and Had Several Pleasant Hours on the Golf Course. Where He Showed Skill at the Game.

OTTAWA, Sept. 2.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales spent the week-end quietly at Government House after his tiring experiences of Thursday and Friday, and took full advantage of the respite given by the change of plans which originally called for him spending the week-end at Rideau Hall. Here, at 1160, with the bulk sellins at from $110 to $125. Ordinary milch cows were slow of sale.

Bologna bulls were considerably lower, packers bidding around $6 per cwt. for lightweight animals. Heavy bologna bulls sold at from $7 to $8.

Canning cows sold around $5 to $5.25.

With nearly 2,900 sheep and lambs on sale yesterday the trade was very 15c and easier, and from 1/4c to 1/2c dragger, the market opening at around off. The sheep market is easier, too, from 1/2c to 1c lower, and with about 70 calves on sale the market showed a marked decline anywhere from $1 to $2 off from last week's trading.

With 2479 hogs prices were 19 3/4c f.o.b. 20 3/4c at the chairman at 9 o'clock off. For Tuesday loading, the packers are quoting 19c to the farmer, 119 1/4c f.o.b., 20 1/4c weighed off.

BOLSHEVIKI DEFEATED.

Australians Are Now Aiding Russian Forces.

ARCHANGEL, Sept. 2.—With the Russian troops now conducting operations, aided by 200 Australians from the British forces, a stern fight is proceeding along the railway front. A British airplane directed hostilities by bombing the town of Emtsa. The infantry then attacked, supported by heavy gunfire, and pierced the enemy's front positions, capturing Emtsa with 350 prisoners, including four commissaries.

The Bolsheviki counter-attacked, employing three armored trains, and re-entered Emtsa.

Artillery duel is under way; airplanes are bombing the town, and the Russian infantry had begun another advance.

Official reports to the War Office from Archangel announce the recapture by the Russian and Australian forces of the town of Emtsa. "The town is now in our hands," the report says. "We captured ten guns and 350 prisoners. Our casualties were light."

Five Hundred British Settlers.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—A party of 500 settlers will sail for Canada next March under the auspices of the Church Army. With this party, the first since the war, will travel Richard Gloyne, who was in business for himself as emigration agent before the war and had only three departures from Canada. Courtney has been appointed Emigration Manager to the Church Army, with a view to revise the organization root and branch.

The party will contain no human derelicts. It will consist mainly of young men who will go on the land and young women domestics. All will pay their own passage.

Possible exceptions will be mothers of dead soldiers sons who wish to join their surviving children or relatives in Canada. These may receive assistance from the fund of £25,000 which the British Government has allocated for the purpose of Imperial emigration.

Builds Up Marine; Asks No Profits.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Without profit or commission to himself or his firm, Lord Inchcape, chairman of the P. & O. Steamship Company, has now completed the distribution of 196 vessels, aggregating 1,400,000 tons, and costing approximately £30,800,000.

These vessels were originally laid down to the order of the Government, and when the war came to an end shipowners evinced little inclination to take over contracts, until Lord Inchcape, formerly James L. Mackay, India merchant, stepped in to help them, acquired the whole, and allotted them at cost price, among owners who had lost heavy tonnage during the war.

German Prisoners Released.

PARIS, Sept. 2.— An agreement has been reached between the French, British and American by which the German prisoners held by the British and Americans may be released immediately.

Explosion on British Monitor.

ARCHANGEL, Sept. 2.—The monitor Glowworm has been sunk at Bereznik. The cause of the disaster was the explosion of an ammunition barge. The loss is estimated at 20 men killed and 40 missing.

John G. Lethbridge was nominated by the United Farmers of West Middlesex for the Legislature.

Workers met at the Labor Temple, Toronto, to protest against holding Western labor leaders without bail pending trial.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Sept. 2. — With 800 cattle on the market yesterday a very large percentage of which were light in weight and poor in quality, the market was generally 25c to 50c lower and trading was slow. The biggest decline was shown in lightweight steers and heifers, medium and common cows and bulls.

There was a good demand for finished cattle, loads of good and choice butchers sold at satisfactory prices. There was a very good inquiry for good butcher cows.

For milch cows and springers the market was good for the better, extra choice cows selling up to $160, with the bulk sellins at from $110 to $125. Ordinary milch cows were slow of sale.

With nearly 2,900 sheep and lambs on sale yesterday the trade was very 15c and easier, and from 1/4c to 1/2c dragger, the market opening at around off. By the Chinese Workers

With Forces in France

AN interesting sidelight is thrown on a little known phase of army life in Flanders by a story contributed to the Manchester Guardian by an English ex-soldier signing himself F. A. V. He writes:—

"During the war a certain town in French Flanders was invaded by a horde of Chinese laborers. They wore blue quilted clothing, army boots and conical fur-lined caps. A raw wind was blowing the fine rain into their tanned faces. They all looked cold and hungry.

"Outside the town was a great assembly of bell tents, newly erected on a muddy field fenced in with barbed wire. A dozen Chinamen were shown into each tent by an English corporal and then left to do as they pleased. It was too wet and unpleasant to be in the open, so they just sat down on their haunches, forlorn and miserable.

"For a time nothing could be heard except a few brief snatches of whispered conversation. Then there was a sniff, and sniff was followed by sniff — some of them were actually weeping over their hard lot, discordant wails came from one of the tents. Voices from other tents joined in, and the sound increased in volume.

"It was vaguely mournful, although it did not seem to correspond with any definite human emotion. It varied greatly in pitch, it rose and fell, and it even had a kind of rhythm. At first we ever puzzled by the weird noise, and then we realized that it must be song. We were, indeed, listening to Chinese music—music that authorities on Eastern culture have praised as subtle and beautiful, though quite unintelligible to the uninitiated. It certainly was unintelligible.

"So the poor exiles found consolation in song, and in time they got so used to their new existence that in later days they seemed to be always cheerful and animated.

"For several months our company and a Chinese labor company worked together at a woodyard and sawmill on the Belgian frontier. We called them Chinks and they called us Inglesha. Friendly relations were soon established, although there was on our side a small hostile element consisting of men who harbored an unreasoning prejudice against the yellow people and considered it degrading to work with a so-called 'inferior race.' Those who took this attitude lost much of the little fun and interest that relieved the dreary monotony of our own army life.

"At first the easy familiarity of the Chinks was quite startling. I happened to be leaning against a wooden shed when one of them came up to me in the usual shuffling manner. No intention of any kind was expressed on his face, and, without saying a word, he unbuttoned my tunic pocket, took out my pocketbook and examined my papers. Apparently he found nothing of interest, so put the book back again, buttoned up the pocket and shuffled off. Some time afterward another Chink approached me in the same delightfully informal way. He took my cigarette off my nose and put them on his own. He seemed to find them satisfactory, and, evidently wishing to buy them, he asked me, 'How many flanks?' But I did not want to part with them for any number of 'flanks,' and conveyed as much to him. He looked at them for a moment, then carefully put them back on my nose, looked at them again and walked off with affected unconcern.

"The Chinks and ourselves would often collect in little groups and converse as best we could. One of the questions they invariably put was 'How many year?' meaning 'How old are you?' We would answer either in a few words of Chinese we had picked up or, more commonly, by indicating the number with our fingers.

"The Chinks seemed to attach great importance to the information supplied to them; they would discuss it among themselves in their own sibilant patter, and then they would tell us their own ages in return. Another question they often asked was: 'How many mada?' meaning 'How many wives (madams) have you got?' We, of course, had either one or none at all, while the Chinks sometimes had 'three,' to their obvious pride and satisfaction.

"Whether consciously or unconsciously, they assumed that all men were equal, and that other men were just other men and nothing more. Thus the artificial inequality due to army conditions filled them with hostility, a hostility they often expressed with great frankness. One day we were talking to some Chinks when one of them tapped me on the chest, and said with an emphatic shake of his head, 'You goods.' I was a private, and he meant to say that there was nothing wrong with privates. Then he laid his two fingers flat on my upper arm to indicate the two stripes of a corporal, and said: 'No goods.' Finally he pointed to my shoulder to indicate the pip of an officer and said with solemn conviction, 'No blooda goods.'

"Sometimes when we were working with the Chinks the spirit of rivalry manifested itself. Once we were unloading a train of short, thick wooden planks and stacking them in the yard. We carried them in on our shoulders, two at a time. Suddenly one of our men appeared with three planks on his shoulder, shouting, 'Chinese no goods!'

"The challenge was accepted with alacrity, for a Chink appeared with four planks and shouted, 'Chinesha goods, Inglesha no goods!' He was followed by one of us with five planks on his shoulder, and it was 'Chinese no goods!' once again. Then came a Chink with six planks, but immediately afterward a soldier came along with seven, looking very hot and uncomfortable beneath such a heavy load. We all shouted decisively, 'Chinese no goods!' and there was a long pause, and we thought the victory was ours. But suddenly the Chinks burst into gleeful laughter and clapped their hands in mad excitement.

"We did not know what had happened until we saw a Ching staggering under a kind of pagoda which his comrades had erected on his stalwart shoulders. It was built of sixteen planks! Perspiring, breathing hard and taking short, rapid steps, his pagoda on the verge of toppling over every instant, he reached the stack and then allowed the structure to collapse amid wild shouts of 'Chinesha goods, Inglesha no goods!' It was a warm day, and none of us felt inclined to dispute the final verdict at this meeting of East and West."

Canada's Immigrants.

Canada's immigrants, 1900-16, numbered 4,141,111, of which only 1,168,282 were of British stock.

The 8,075,000 total population comprised in 1915 just over 33 nationalities and 83 languages and dialects. In Winnipeg one-third of the male population is foreign; in Montreal one in seven, in Toronto one in ten. Rich Northern Ontario has a 45 non-Anglo-Saxon population, Manitoba 42 per cent., Alberta 40. In 1916, Saskatchewan had 647,855 people, of whom less than half spoke English."

These were but a few of the striking figures furnished the I. O. D. E. sessions when the national educational secretary, Mrs. C. Smith, stirred all to action in regard to Canada's melting pot. Very plainly did she point out that, unless this problem were solved, Canada's war sacrifices would have been naught.

Ontario's Record.

The war expenditures of the Ontario Government for five years are interesting. When everything is included, from the establishment and maintenance of the Ontario Military Hospital at Orpington to the grant for the home gardens movement, the total reaches the handsome figure of $8,459,692. To the Patriotic Fund the people of Ontario have paid $1,079 $99, one-half of the contribution of all Canada; to the British Red Cross, in money and materials, over $5,000,000; to the Y.M.C.A., $931,000; to the Navy League, for the dependants of mercantile seamen, $1,000,000. The enlistments from Ontario were 213,191, or 43 per cent. of the total enrollment, though the province contains only a little more than one-quarter of the Canadian people.

JULY 19TH HISTORIC

DATE WAS SELECTED FOR PEACE CELEBRATION.

It Was the Anniversary of the Day on Which the Canadians Began to Move Into the Great Battle, Known as the Last Hundred Days, Which Ended In Victory.

IT was a coincidence, but a very fitting coincidence, that July 19 should have been chosen for the official celebration and thanksgiving for the signing of peace. For just one year previously, on July 19, 1918, in France, began that wonderful movement of troops which culminated in the series of battles known now as the Last Hundred Days, the battles which resulted in the overwhelming of the enemy, his unconditional capitulation and finally in the treaty which has been acclaimed throughout the British Empire.

During the war little or nothing was heard of the preparations which preceded any great battle. The silence was necessary. Yet the organization of forces and material for any great battle throbbed with a greater romance than the actual fighting did. If the organization, the staff work had been done thoroughly, the battle resolved itself into more or less of a mechanical movement.

The battle of the Somme, 1916, of Vimy, and of Passchendaele, 1917, were preceded by little or no attempt at secrecy. The army and army group commanders depended largely on a preponderance of artillery. Gen. Sir Julian Byng was the first man to show what silence could accomplish by his sudden onslaught on the Cambrai front in the autumn of 1917. It was by enlarging upon Byng's tactics that Ludendorff rose to power and achieved such triumphs in the spring of 1918.

Then, a year ago secrecy of movement and of all organization became recognized as the chief factor in the prosecution of any major operation. And it was with the adoption of this maxim that romance of the last hundred days was born. It is only possible to quote it from the Canadian Corps' viewpoint, or rather from the actual experience of one battalion of the Canadian Corps. But what is common to that battalion was common to all.

On May 3, 1918, the Canadian Corps, which had been holding one-fifth of the whole British front in the Lens and Arras sectors, was moved into General Headquarters' Reserve, for the purposes of training for future offensive operations, and for the purpose of counter-attacking, should the enemy have projected the expected attacks at Bethune and Arras.

Early in July the corps again took its place in the line on the old corps' homestead, Arras.

Then on July 19th, as one battalion was preparing to take over its share of the front line, orders were suddenly cancelled, and the battalion ordered to march to a camp at Agnez-les-Duisine, about seven kilometres behind Arras. As far as Canada was concerned, the first, the important phase of the last hundred days had commenced.

Two days were spent at this camp, where the men were thoroughly refitted, machine guns and Lewis guns hauled, and all records checked. Each man was given a slip of paper to be pasted in his paybook. The slip was headed with the attack type which read, "Keep Your Mouth Shut." Then followed reasons for the necessity of secrecy, and an appeal to the men not to question any order given, or to divulge any information, even to their own name, unless they were absolutely sure of the identity of the questioner.

Late on the afternoon of the third day, orders were received for the battalion to proceed by route march to a given spot on the Arras-St. Pol road, where busses would be in waiting. The destination of these busses was not even known to the colonel of the battalion. At eight o'clock, just as the Gothas were humming their way towards the nearby villages, the battalion "embussed" and sped along the road to the railway siding at Tinques. At two o'clock the next morning the battalion entrained, and the company commanders were issued with maps of Hazebrouck (Ypres sector).

The surprise of the officers can be imagined, when with the breaking of dawn they discovered themselves speeding past Etaples in the direction of Abbeville. At 10 o'clock that morning the battalion detrained at a little wayside station in the Department of the Somme, and marched inland about five miles.

From that time onward no movement was done during the day. Everything was carried out under cover of darkness. Even then the strictest attention was paid to secrecy. The men could sing and talk and smoke as much as they wished as they marched along the open countryside, but the moment a village was reached, no matter how small, absolute silence had to prevail. Only the tramp, tramp, tramp of thousands of steel shod feet on the cobbles broke the stillness of the summer night, as the troops passed through the sleeping villages.

Though the men were free to chat and sing along the highway, they were, nevertheless, always alert to the danger of espionage, so much so, that often a company commander seeking word of one of his platoon commanders was unable to get the information from his own men. For to the question "Where is Lieut. Blank?" would come back the answer, "Never heard of him." Or to the question, "What are you?" the answer, "Mule train or working party" — retorts that never failed to raise a laugh.

In the daytime all ranks were closely confined to billets. Only those whose duty forced them to pass along the streets, were permitted outside their cottages or barns as the case might be. And those, whether officers or men, had to run across all open spaces, and when walking up a street to hug the sides of buildings. British airplanes flew overhead taking photographs, and a severe censure was the lot of any battalion commander whose men appeared in those photographs.

So that no information could leak out through stragglers, men who could not stand up to the rigors of the march, mounted police followed several miles in the rear of each unit, gathering these stragglers into groups and taking care of them until they could be transferred to the field hospitals. Not one point was overlooked. Battalion commanders commenced their nightly march with orders that took them to some desired spot, where the additional and final orders for the completion of the march were given them.

While this was taking place, two battalions of the Second Canadian Division were rushed to the Ypres sector, where great visible activity was being shown. Dummy hospitals, guns, ammunition dumps, and hangars were erected, and a few battalions marched aimlessly along the main roads, day after day, in order to convey to the enemy the impression that big movements of troops were in progress. The two Canadian battalions took their place in the trenches one night and made a raid, leaving behind identification in sufficient quantity to let the Hun know that Canadian troops were on that sector. After the raid they were at once relieved and hurried to Amiens, where, in conjunction with their brother battalions, they took part in that famous attack on the morning of August 8.

The result of this secrecy and this subterfuge was exactly what was intended. The enemy, seeing only the dummy preparations, hurried reinforcements to the Ypres salient, with the result that when, on that beautiful summer morning of August 8, the brilliant rays of the newborn sun were dimmed by the simultaneous flash from thousands of guns, they were woefully unprepared, and the Canadians, with their British, Australian and French brothers, broke through at Amiens for the greatest advance of the whole war on the western front, seven and one-half miles in one day, 15 miles in three days.

The events which followed are common knowledge—Monchy, Drocourt-Queant Switch, Canal du Nord, Bourlon, Cambrai, Denain, La Sentinelle, Valenciennes, and last of all, Mons, July 19, 1918, was the real beginning of the peace which the world now enjoys. And for it the world owes as much to Gen. Rawlinson, and to all the officers and men who so loyally carried out the strategy he created, as it does to the statesmen who drew up the final document which closed the era of strife.

Discriminating Veracity.

"Is Biggins a truthful man?"

"Yes. But the truth doesn't seem to interest him particularly unless it is something unpleasant about somebody else."

Proof that Some Women do Avoid Operations

Mrs. Etta Dorion, of Ogdensburg, Wis., says:

"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

How Mrs. Boyd Avoided an Operation.

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

CITIZENS' LIBERTY LEAGUE

Its Aim and Its Object

The Citizens' Liberty League is an organization of representative men and women throughout Ontario, who through necessity have banded themselves together to oppose all legislation (Dominion or Provincial) which tends to curtail the liberties and lawful rights of the citizen.

In view of the imminence of the Ontario Referendum the activities of the League will for the present be chiefly directed to

SANE LIQUOR LEGISLATION

The Ontario Temperance Act, adopted by the Government as a war measure—without the vote of the people—is legislation that does curtail personal liberty and one which has bred great dissatisfaction.

The Citizens' Liberty League is absolutely opposed to a return of the open bar as it previously existed in Ontario under the old License Act. The League believes that The Ontario Temperance Act should be repealed and so enable the Government to enact a law in accord with the sentiment of the people, permitting the general sale of non-intoxicating beer and light wines and the sale of pure spirituous liquors only through Government agencies under proper restrictions.

Now that a Referendum is about to be taken, the members of the League feel that every citizen should clearly understand the meaning and significance of the questions asked in the Referendum Ballot.

In order to accomplish this purpose the Citizens' Liberty League will discuss all phases of this great issue in the public press in the interests of sane, moderate temperance legislation.

Principal Says Farewell.

Sir William Peterson, who is retiring as principal of McGill University, after 24 years of service, to be succeeded by Sir Auckland Geddes, said farewell in a letter which was read at the annual convocation. "My colleagues in the administration and on the teaching staff know how greatly I have valued their co-operation and loyal support during those 24 years," said Sir William. "May the record of McGill in the next quarter of a century outshine and eclipse everything that has been accomplished in the past. In any case the friends of the university may rest assured that her progress and prosperity will always have a foremost place in my thoughts and affections."

The announcement from the Carnegie Foundation that a retiring allowance of $4,000 had been voted to Sir William Peterson was received with gratification by every one connected with McGill. In his letter the secretary of the Carnegie Foundation said: "The executive committee in taking this action desired me to express to you, as best I might, their affectionate and kindly feeling, as well as to assure you in this official way of their appreciation of the magnificent services for civilization which you were able to do during the four hard years of war which have passed. The committee hope that there will be left for you many years of activity and influence in education and statesmanship such as can come only from a man of your ripe experience and knowledge."

Pigeon-Gentile.

A most pleasing event took place at St. Patrick's Church on Monday morning last, when Miss Rosenna Gentile became the blushing bride of Mr. Ernest Pigeon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father O'Connor, assisted by the choir, with Mr. Harold Barrett, of Belleville, Miss Clancy, of Peterboro, and Mrs. McGraw, Napanee, as soloists. During the service Father O'Connor delivered a short address on the sanctity of the marriage vows. The marriage was witnessed by a large number of friends and acquaintances, which taxed the seating capacity of the church. Sharp at nine o'clock in the morning the wedding party, in four automobiles, amid showers of confetti, left the home of her sister, Mrs. V. Bova, on Dundas Street, and proceeded to the church. The bride looked exceedingly charming in her wedding attire and was attended by Miss Anna Fitzpatrick, who also was becomingly attired to suit the occasion, while the little Misses Hilda McGraw and Margaret Bedore, who acted as flower girls, completed the bride's suite. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin with trimming of gold lace, a wedding veil very becomingly arranged over a Juliet cap of orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of roses and maiden hair fern. The bridesmaid looked very dainty in a pink voile gown and wore a black velvet hat with facing of pink, and carried a bouquet of roses. The flower girls looked very cute in white voile dresses and carried baskets of pink gladioli and fern. The groom, who by the way, was quartered at the Armouries here with the 80th Battalion, prior to his going overseas, was ably supported by Mr. R. N. Dupont. After the ceremony at the church the joyous wedding party visited the studio of Mr. F. S. Richardson, and had a photo taken of the participants in this pleasant event, which included Mr. and Mrs. Pigeon, Mr. and Mrs. V. Bova, Miss Anna Fitzpatrick, Mr. Dupont, the little Misses Hilda McGraw and Margaret Bedore, and Rev. Father O'Connor. The wedding party then proceeded to the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Bova, which had been beautifully and tastefully decorated for the occasion, where a sumptuous wedding breakfast had been prepared, and which was partaken of by over one hundred guests. This most pleasing event was brought to a conclusion by a social gathering and reception in the evening, a Napanee orchestra furnishing the music. The groom's gift to the bride was a cluster diamond ring, while the bride's gift to the groom was a solitaire diamond ring. The bride was the recipient of a check for $500 from her sister, Mrs. Bova. An extra large number of valuable and useful presents to the bride and groom amply testified as to the esteem in which they are held by their many friends and acquaintances. The happy couple will make their home in Tweed, where they will embark upon a business career.

LEMONS WHITEN AND BEAUTIFY THE SKIN

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, whitener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It is marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands.

Kingston Wedding.

From Kingston Standard—A pretty wedding solemnized at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. R. A. Fraser, Aberdeen Ave., on September 1st, when Evelyn Elizabeth was united in marriage to Frank Willis Gaotes, Capt. the Rev. John McNab officiated. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Cyrus B. Huffman, was unattended, and looked charming in a travelling suit of taupe silk and hat to match. She carried a bouquet of yellow chrysanthemums. A buffet luncheon was served, after which the happy couple left on the steamer Toronto for western points and Muskoka Lakes.

For good peaches and plums go to H. W. Kelly. He gets a shipment every day direct from the orchards.

The Horse Races at the Napanee Fair on Tuesday and Wednesday next will be equally good both days. Make it a point to attend the show both days.

What was probably the most valuable load of seed ever delivered at Belleville was brought in from the farm of A. G. Roblin and Sons, of Amelisburgh. It was a load of 31 bags of alsike clover seed. For this load Messrs. C. E. Bishop and Son, the well-known Front St. seedmen, paid the enormous total of $1463.33 at the rate of $20 a bushel. The seed was all grown on 100 acres of land.—Belleville Ontario.

One can learn all about nursing not only in the hospital but in the home, by reading a new book just out, which teaches all there is to know about nursing except the practical experience. This book, called "Nursing in the Home," is written for the ordinary reader, contains five hundred pages, many illustrations, and is nicely bound. It contains chapters on Emergencies, First Aid, Care of the Wounded, Burns, Scalds, Broken Legs, Arms, Advice for Mothers and How to Care for Infants, How to Recognize Different Diseases, Taking Temperature, etc.

The home nurse will find within its pages reliable up-to-date instruction for caring for the sick, and the professional nurse will renew her hospital training. Such a book usually sells for $1.50, and every woman should have a copy for ready reference. Your druggist has it for sale for a limited time for 50 cents, or send 50 cents to the World's Medical Press, 654 Washington St., Buffalo, N. Y. Edition limited.

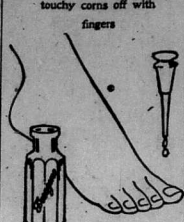
LIFT OFF CORNS!
Apply few drops then lift sore, touchy corns off with fingers



Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little Freezone on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right out. Yes, magic!
A tiny bottle of Freezone costs but a few cents at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.
Freezone is the sensational discovery of a Cincinnati genius. It is wonderful.

HOSPITAL NURSE PRAISES TANLAC
Gains Eleven Pounds and Is Feeling Fine Since Taking Tanlac.
"Tanlac did so much for me that I feel it my duty to tell others about this medicine," said C. M. Rhamey, a professional nurse living at the Hotel George, on Sixth Street, San Francisco, Cal., recently. Mr. Rhamey has been nursing patients in the hospitals for the past eight years.
"Last February," he continued, "owing to an accident in which my leg was broken I was confined to my bed for several weeks. I lost my appetite and could hardly eat anything to nourish me, consequently I lost weight. I took several different kinds of tonics, hoping they would help build me up, but they did me no good.
"One morning I read a statement by a lady in Los Angeles who said she had gotten such wonderful benefits from taking Tanlac that I decided to try it myself. By the time I had finished half of my first bottle my appetite returned and I felt hungry for the first time in weeks. From then on I started right in to pick up and my appetite got better and I slept better at night. I have already gained eleven pounds and am feeling just fine; even my doctor has remarked how much better I am looking. I would never allow my name to be used in connection with a medicine before, but I have had such excellent results from using Tanlac that I take great pleasure in recommending it to anyone needing a medicine to build up the system."
Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON. (advt)

BUILDS AND BINDS A NATION.
Truly national in character is the exhibit of the Canadian National Railways in the Railway Building at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto. The ensemble is most striking, and the electric lighting of the dome, combined with most artistic draperies, lends a spacious character to the whole exhibit, while the arrangement of the display in general permits of freedom of movement to view the various exhibits in detail.
The frieze decorations show typical landscape views of the nine Provinces, with the coat of arms of each the connecting link bearing the highly significant reminder that this is an exhibit of a line that builds and binds a nation."
Three sides of the octagonal building are occupied by a huge typographical map of the Dominion, on which are shown in brilliant illumination the names of the principal points reached by the Canadian National Railways, the great steel strand that threads the land" being indicated by a broad band of red.
No better or more comprehensive plan could have been adopted to demonstrate that 14,000 miles of railway are now under Canadian National management, and that the Canadian Northern, the Intercolonial and Transcontinental railways have been amalgamated into one vast system. To further demonstrate the fact that the system traverses every province of the Dominion and reaches every provincial capital, the observer by an ingenious arrangement of flashing lights, is taken in fancy right across the continent from Halifax to Vancouver and Victoria, stopping momentarily at the principal points en route and then brought back again. The map should prove of much educational value in showing just what the Canadian National Railways are and the Territory they reach.

Beautiful Transparencies.
A rustic centrepiece and several rustic lanterns contain some really beautiful photographic transparencies which do not fail to call attention to Canada's innumerable scenic gems, while the hunter's log cabin with its sporting trophies is also utilized for the projection of dissolving views and moving pictures of scenic and sporting and industrial life.
Forestry, pulp and paper, minerals, Indian trophies and agricultural features complete an exhibit of which there has evidently been much careful preparation and considerable forethought. Nor has the royal visit been forgotten, for on top of the pyramid evoted to a beautiful display of British Columbian fruit, stands the Prince of Wales' crest, the three feathers worked in grain, with the motto, "Ich Dien." Altogether it is an exhibit which every visitor should see if he would learn of Canada's national system of transportation.

THE NAPANEE FAIR

A Show Worth While With Attractive Programme.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of next week at the Napanee Driving Park, the new Agricultural Society will stage their first real fair since the old Agricultural Society ceased on account of the war. The new management are to be congratulated on the efforts put forth to have the new buildings put in shape for the fair, and a successful show should reward the efforts put forth by the officers of the Society.

Among the many special prizes offered may be mentioned :

The Baby Show, on the evening of the first day.

The Gibbard Furniture Co., contributes $50.00 in prizes. Four first prizes of $5.00 each, four second prizes of $3.00 each, a special prize of $10.00 and a baby pin will be given to each baby not winning a prize.

The Robinson Co. also contributes $10.00 for the best Veteran's baby.

Mr. C. M. Wilson, C. C. A., offers a valuable cup 16½ inches high, for High School or Collegiate Drill. Open to all schools between Cobourg and Brockville.

Messrs. J. L. Boyes & Son offer a valuable cup 21½ inches high for a tug of war competition open to all G. W. V. A. branches between Cobourg and Brockville inclusive.

Messrs. Boyle & Son offer a $35.00 solid Bronze Lamp, for best decorated automobile, open only to farmers in the County of Lennox and Addington.

A tractor demonstration will be held on the farm of Mr. M. C. Bogart adjoining the fair ground both days, starting at 10 a.m. each day. All the Tractor Companies represented in Napanee have agreed to exhibit their tractor at this demonstration.

HORSE RACES.

No. 1—2.12 Class, $300 ; No. 2—2.16 Class, $300 ; No. 3—2.30 Class, $250 ; No. 4—2.40 Class, $250.

BASEBALL GAMES.

Interesting Baseball Games will be played each day and should furnish good sport.

All these things, together with the unusually attractive program should furnish an exceedingly attractive show, which will surely repay you to visit it each day.

Among the other large special prizes might be mentioned, The Dominion Bank, $35.00 in prizes for cheese exhibit. The Merchants Bank $35.00 in prizes for Yorkshire pigs. The Royal Bank and R. G. H. Travers $25.00 for holstein cow and bacon pigs. The Farmer's Dairy Co., $20.00 in prizes for Holstein cows and the Standard Bank $10.00 prize on Agricultural horses. To mention all the valuable special prizes contributed by Napanee merchant's, would fill several columns.

Get a prize list and look them over and it will convince you that there will be plenty to see at the New Big Fair of Tuesday and Wednesday next at the Napanee Driving Park.

The price of liquor on the streets of Kingston is $6 per bottle. A returned soldier who was pretty dry this week, and had not ready cash, paid this amount for a bottle of whiskey.

An automobile party passing through Napanee Sunday evening encountered what they thought, a very smart trick, by the driver deliberately using his hand to upset one of the "silent policemen", breaking the top off.

Labor Day passed very quietly at Napanee, quite a number of our citizens going down the bay for a fish and duck shoot, and others to Deseronto, while the baseball boys journeyed to Trenton.

The members of Orange Lodge No. 358, will attend a Memorial Service in St. Mary Magdalene Church, on Sunday evening next. A cordial invitation is extended to all lodges in this district, also the ladies lodge, of Napanee, to attend.

Mr. Charles Reid, C.N.R. agent at Deseronto, was the victim of a distressing accident Tuesday evening, while standing on the station platform at Deseronto, waiting for a train. Two boys were playing, one throwing a stick at the other. The stick missed its mark but struck Mr. Reid in the eye. He was rushed to Kingston to the Hospital, where it was found the sight had been destroyed, it is believed.

Fascinating and alluring beyond all measure will be the Big Peace Dance, which the Directors of Picton Fair are staging in the Armouries on the night of Sept. 18th as a grand finale to PICTON FAIR. The magnificient floor space of the Armories, combined with a Grand Orchestra of 25 pieces, will make for a night of pleasure beyond compare. Take in PICTON FAIR on the last day and stop over for the big Peace Dance at night, and a most delightful time will be yours.

THE CRICKET

The Lennox Conservatives met last week and have chosen as their candidate for legislature, Mr. R. A. Fowler, who has so ably represented us since the death of Mr. Carscallen. Mr. Chas. Hamby was also put up before the Committee, but stood down in Fowler's favor. In withdrawing he said a few words, ending up with "All I ask of the farmers is to sell me their hogs." The association chose two Presidents, two Assistant Secretaries and two Treasureus. It would appear that they intend to lead a double life !

* * *

Why, we wonder, is the U. S. flag flown with such vigour in this town, and many others, that are composed of Canadians mainly, and lovers of the Canadian flag. The stars and stripes floats majestically over the portals of the Paisley Hotel, and the Canadian flag adorns the place. It isn't that anyone likes to see the flag cheapened by being unfurled over every hotel and eating house, but we do like to see people who insist on waving a foreign flag show the flag of Canada the Common Courtesy, which is its due. If the proprietor of that estimable place doesn't know that the flag of the country is generally flown over the foreign flag, perhaps he had better make enquiries and learn. We don't make many rules about flags in this country, and it is well for some people that we don't. Perhaps some reader will remember the Napanee man who sailed down American waters with a Canadian flag flying from his "putt-putt" and no Yankee flag. This so aroused the ire of the courteous people on shore that they fired on the Canadian flag with rifles to make him haul it down. We don't do that sort of thing in Canada, or perhaps we might indulge in a little shooting practice ourselves. Mr. Fitzpatrick, we hope not to have country you profess allegiance, we only know that you claim a vote in Canada. Why do you not regard the flag of Canada ? Why do you fly the U. S. Flag and none other ?

* * *

The subject of flag-waving has been one of much discussion since the war began. We managed to keep up our patriotism and to remember our duties toward our Country and Empire, and to perform these duties without being continually confronted with our flag. It has been said, and is remarked quite frequently by admiring foreigners "who know," that the flag of the British Empire is generally flown in its proper place. On government buildings and Municipal buildings is where the flag belongs and where it is generally seen. In this country it is not considered necessary for each merchant, store, hotel, motion picture theatre, and factory to fly the flag as a proof of patriotism. The flag is not merely a colorful square of bunting that is hung from our windows and smokestacks as an ornament or to attract attention. The Flag is a mere emblem,the emblem of the glorious freedom and rights which Canadians are so fortunate as to enjoy, and therefore we use the flag as it should be used, on the occasions and for the purposes it should be used.

* * *

A Tamworth Hotel boasts the following sign, painted on the glass over the main doorway, "Licensed to sell Spirituous Wines and Liquors." This proves in all truth the old adage that all signs fail in a drought !

* * *

We hear a great deal of talk these days about this "personal liberty." We believe that the Wet Party have adopted this as their slogan. Will some kind "Wet" umbriaka to explain to us the meaning of this new "personal liberty." As far as we have been able to learn it means let each man do what he likes—in other words, why should we worry who is hung as long as it doesn't incommitted; what they thought, a very smart trick, by the driver deliberately using his hand to upset one of the "silent policemen", breaking the top off. cry havoc and let loose the dogs of war ; or just plain Bolshevik ! After we have been told what personal liberty is, it is some newfound thing and we should all know the secret of its enjoyment, we will tell all comers and enquirers. Perhaps by next Friday some kind soul will have told us. Watch for it ! We'll put the formula in big print.

Napanee is due for one of the largest crowds that has ever paraded our fair avenues. The Lennox Fair next week is going to present the finest thing in fall fairs ever held in this County. Perhaps a forgetful man will get the prize for the best squash ; and the dozen buns and jar of fruit prizes will be carried off by a different person. A different first prize grade cow will be shown on its merits, not by ownership. There will be sports of different kinds to amuse and interest the business weary citizen of the County, different cups will be competed for, and the War Veteran's Tug of War will not be the least interesting. We suppose that persons climbing the fence to evade ticket collectors will have to reckon with Sam Wilson and Peter Post and Chas. Bruton, as in the days gone by. How sad that no silvering stream runs by the grounds to facilitate the bookin' in by the scores of boys. The gate receipts ought to swell by reason of this if for none other. For those people who are far away had better draw near to see this, the first REAL fair ever held here. In previous years the chief attraction has been the peanut and taffy stalls, but an excellent programme lasting two whole days is promised this year. The buildings on the fair grounds do credit to the gentlemen who have devoted their time and energy for such a long time to this work, and we are sure that the Fair will be well worth attending. The grounds are well supplied with shade trees and pleasant walks. The box lunch will be more satisfactorily disposed of than before. The hard drink bars will be closed all day on both dates ! Canvassers from the U. F. O. party will interview you on the grounds in all probability, and tell you of the great opportunities to be had by electing Ed. Tunn up on the 9th and 10th.

Might we be allowed to suggest to the ambitious members of the police force that they take an odd quiet ramble or so down the Main street during the evenings and disperse the crowds and knots of loafers that clutter the street. It is a well known fact that our Main street has more loafers to the square inch than nearly any other town in the Province. Surely these fellows aren't such close friends of the Policemen that they are allowed to loaf unmolested. Wake up Chief !

Long Live The King

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE REDPATH COMPANY. COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY MARY ROBERTS RINEHART. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

He had staged the affair well. The crown prince, standing alone, so small, so appealing, against his magnificent background, was a picture to touch the hardest. Not for nothing had Mettlich studied the people, read their essential simplicity, their answer to any appeal to the heart. These men were men of family. Surely no father of a son could see that lonely child and not offer him loyalty.

With the same wisdom, he had given the boy small instruction, and no speech of thanks. "Let him say what comes into his head," Mettlich had reasoned. "It will at least be spontaneous and boyish."

The first formalities over, and the crown prince having shaken hands nine times, the spokesman stepped forward. He had brought a long, written speech, which had already been given to the newspapers. But after a moment's hesitation he folded it up.

"Your royal highness," he said, looking down, "I have here a long speech, but all that it contains I can say briefly. It is your birthday, highness. We come, representing many others, to present to you our congratulations, and—the love of your people. It is our hope"—he paused. Emotion and excitement were getting the better of him—"our hope, highness, that you will have many happy years. To further that hope, we are here today to say that we, representing all classes, are your most loyal subjects. We have fought for his majesty the king, and if necessary we will fight for you." He glanced beyond the child at the council, and his tone was strong and impassioned. "But today we are here, not to speak of war, but to present to you our congratulations, our devotion, and our loyalty."

Also a casket. He had forgotten that. He stepped back, was nudged, and recollected.

"Also a gift," he said, and ruined a fine speech among smiles. But the presentation took place in due order, and Otto cleared his throat.

"Thank you all very much," he said. "It is a very beautiful gift. I admire it very much. I should like to keep it on my desk, but I suppose it is too valuable. Thank you very much."

The spokesman hoped that it might be arranged that he keep it on his desk, an ever-present reminder of the love of his city. To this the chancellor observed that it would be arranged, and the affair was over. To obviate the difficulty of having the delegation back down the long room, it was the crown prince who departed first, with the chancellor.

Late in the afternoon the king sent for Prince Ferdinand William Otto. He had not left his bed since the day he had placed the matter of Hedwig's marriage before the council, and now he knew he would never leave it. There were times between sleeping and waking when he fancied he had already gone, and that only his weary body on the bed remained. At such times he saw Hubert, only, strangely enough, not as a man grown, but as a small boy again; and his queen, but as she had looked many years before, when he married her, and when at last, after months of married wooing, she had crept willing into his arms.

So, awakening from a doze, he saw the boy there, and called him Hubert. Prince Ferdinand William Otto, feeling rather worried, did the only thing he could think of. He thrust his warm hand into his grandfather's groping one, and the touch of his soft flesh roused the king.

The sister left them together, and in her small room dropped on her knees before the holy image.

In the king's bed chamber Prince Ferdinand William Otto sat on a high chair, and talked, but he viewed his grandfather with alarm. His aunt had certainly intimated that his running away had made the king worse. And he looked very ill.

"I'm awfully sorry, grandfather," he said.

"For what?"

"That I went away the other day, sir."

"It was, after all, a natural thing to do."

"The crown prince could hardly believe his ears.

"If it could only be arranged safely —a little freedom—" The king lay still with closed eyes.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto felt uneasy. "But I am very comfortable, and—and happy," he hastened to say. "You are, please, not to worry about me, sir."

The king still held his hand, but he said nothing. There were many things he wanted to say. He had gone crooked where this boy must go straight. He had erred, and the boy must avoid his errors. He had cherished enmities, and in his age they cherished him. And now—

"May I ask you a question, sir?"

"What is it?"

"Will you tell me about Abraham Lincoln?"

"Why?" The king was awake enough now. He fixed the crown prince with keen eyes.

"Well, Miss Braithwaite does not care for him. She says he was not a great man, not as great as Mr. Gladstone, anyhow. But Bobby—that's the boy I met; I told you about him—he says he was the greatest man who ever lived."

"And who," asked the king, "do you regard as the greatest man?"

Prince Ferdinand William Otto fidgeted, but he answered bravely, "You, sir."

"Humph!" The king lay still, smiling slightly. "Well," he observed, "there are, of course, other opinions as to that. However—Abraham Lincoln was a very great man. A dreamer, a visionary, but a great man. You might ask Miss Braithwaite to teach you his 'Gettysburg address.' It is rather a model as to speech making, although it contains doctrines that—well, you'd better learn it."

"Yes, sir," said Prince Ferdinand William Otto. He hoped it was not very long.

"Otto," said the king suddenly, "do you ever look at your father's picture?"

"Not always."

"You might—look at it now and then. I'd like you to do it."

"Yes, sir."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Gate of the Moon.

A curious friendship had sprung up between old Adelbert and Bobby Thorpe. In off hours, after school, the boy hung about the ticket taker's cage, tactfully kept now to a wonderful cleanliness and adorned within with pictures cut from the illustrated papers.

Outwardly Adelbert was peaceful. The daughter now received his pension in full, and wrote comforting letters. But his resentment and bitterness at the loss of his position at the opera continued, even grew.

For while he had now even a greater wage, and could eat three meals, besides second breakfast and afternoon coffee, down deep in his heart old Adelbert felt that he had lost caste. The opera—that was a setting! His had been, then, of the best. And now, to what had he fallen! To selling tickets for an American catchpenny scheme, patronized by butchers, by housemaids, by the common people—a noisy, uproarious crowd, that nevertheless counted their change with suspicious eyes, and brought lunches in paper boxes, which they scattered about.

There was, however, a consolation. He had ordered a new uniform. Not for twenty years had he ventured the extravagance, and even now his cautious soul quailed at the price. For the last half dozen years he had stumped through the streets, painfully aware of shabbiness, of a shiny back, of patches, when, on the anniversary of the great battle to which he had sacrificed a leg, the band marched between lines of cheering people.

Now, on this approaching anniversary, he could go peacefully, nay, even proudly, in uniform and with the best cloth, and on its second fitting showed already its marvel of tailoring.

On an evening a week before the parade would occur, he got out his boots. He bought shoe polish, and with straight soles, the right not much different from the left in shape. Thus he managed thriftily to wear, on his one leg, first one of the pair, then the other. But they were both worn now, and because of the cost of the new uniform, he could not buy others.

Armed with the better of the two he visited the cobbler's shop, and there met with bitter news.

"A patch here, and a new heel, comrade," he said. "With that and a polishing, it will do well enough for marching."

The usual group was in the shop, mostly young men, a scattering of gray heads. The advocates of strange doctrines, most of them. Old Adelbert disapproved of them, regarded them with a sort of contempt.

Now he felt that they smiled behind his back. It was his clothing, he felt. He shrugged his shoulders disdainfully. He no longer felt ashamed before them. Already, although the tailor still pressed its seams and marked upon it with chalk, he was lifted in the dignity of the new uniform.

He turned and nodded to them. "A fine evening," he said. "If this weather holds, we will have a good day for the marching." He squinted a faded eye at the sky outside.

"What marching?"

Old Adelbert turned on the speaker sharply. "Probably you have forgotten," he said scornfully, "but in a week comes an anniversary there are many who will remember. The day of a great battle. Perhaps," he added, "if you do not know of what I speak, there are some here who will tell you."

"It is the way of the old to live in the past," a student said. Then, imitating old Adelbert's majestic tone: "We, we live in the future. Eh, comrades?" He turned to the old soldier: "You have not seen the bulletins?"

"Bulletins?"

"There will be no marching, my friend. The uniform now—that is a pity. Perhaps the tailor—" His eyes mocked.

"No marching?"

"An order of the council. It seems that the city is bored by these ancient reminders. It is for peace, and would forget wars. And processions are costly. We grow thrifty. Bands and fireworks cost money, and money, my hero, is scarce—very scarce."

Again the group laughed.

After a time he grasped the truth. There was such an order. The cause was given as the king's illness.

"Since when," demanded old Adelbert angrily, "has the sound of his soldiers' marching disturbed the king?"

"The sound of wooden legs annoys him," observed the mocking student, lighting a cigarette. "He would hear only pleasant sounds, such as the notes of tax money pouring into his vaults. Me—I can think of a pleasanter; the tolling of the cathedral bell, at a certain time, will be music to my ears!"

Old Adelbert stood, staring ahead.

"Since When Was the Sound of His Soldiers Marching Disturbed the King?"

At last he went out into the street, muttering. "They dismiss us before the people," he said quickly.

The order of the council had indeed been issued, a painful business over which Mettlich and the council had pondered long. For in the state of things it was deemed unwise to permit any gathering of the populace en masse. Mobs lead to riots, and riots again to mobs. Five thousand armed men, veterans, but many of them in their prime, were in themselves a danger. And on these days of anniversary it had been the custom of the university to march also, a guard of honor. Sedition was rife among the students.

The order was finally issued.

Old Adelbert was ill that night. He tossed about in a fever. His body ached, even the leg which so long ago had moldered in its shallow grave on a battlefield. For these things happen. By morning he was better, but he was a different man. His eyes glowed. His body twitched. He was stronger, too, for now he broke his sword across his knee, and flung the pieces out of the window. And with them went the last fragment of his old loyalty to his king.

Old Adelbert was now, potentially, a traitor.

On the morning after Adelbert had turned his back on his king, Bobby Thorpe rose early, so early, indeed, that even Pepy still slept in her narrow bed, and the milk sellers had not started on their rounds. The early rising was a mistake, owing to a watch which had strangely gained an hour.

Somewhat disconsolately, he wandered about. Heavy quiet reigned. From a window he watched the meat seller hang out a freshly killed deer, just brought from the mountains. He went downstairs and out on the street, past the niece of the concierge, who was scrubbing the stairs.

"I'm going for a walk," he told her. "If they send Pepy down you might tell her I'll be back for breakfast."

He stood for a time surveying the deer. Then he decided to go hunting himself. The meat seller obligingly gave him the handle of a floor brush, and with this improvised gun Bobby went deer stalking. His dog trotted at his heels.

Around the old city gate, still standing although the wall of which it had been a part was gone, there was excellent hunting. Here they killed and skinned a bear, took fine ivory tusks from a dead elephant, and searched for the trail of a tiger.

The gate was an excellent place for a tiger. Around it was planted an almost impenetrable screen of evergreens, so thick that the ground beneath was quite bare of grass. Here the two hunters crawled on stomachs that began to feel a trifle empty, and here they happened on the trail.

Tucker found it first. His stumpy tail grew rigid. Nose to the ground, he crawled and wriggled through the undergrowth, Bobby at his heels. And now Bobby saw the trail, footprints. It is true that they resembled those of heavy boots with nails. But on the other hand, no one could say surely that the nail marks were not those of claws.

Tucker circled about. The trail grew more exciting. Bobby had to crawl on hands and feet under and through thickets. Branches had been broken as by the passage of some large body. The sportsman clutched his weapon and went on.

An hour later the two hunters returned for breakfast. Washing did something to restore the leader to a normal appearance, but a wondering family discovered him covered with wounds and strangely silent.

"Why, Bob, where have you been?" his mother demanded. "Why, I never saw so many scratches!"

"I've been hunting," he replied briefly. "They don't hurt, anyhow."

Then he relapsed into absorbed silence. His mother, putting cream on his cereal, placed an experienced hand on his forehead. "Are you sure you feel well, dear?" she asked. "I think your head is a little hot."

"I'm all right, mother."

She was wisely silent, but she ran over in her mind the spring treatment for children at home. The blood, she felt, should be thinned after a winter of sausages and rich cocoa. She mentally searched her medicine case.

A strange thing happened that day. A broken plate disappeared from the upper shelf of a closet, where Pepy had hidden it; also a cup with a nick in it, similarly concealed; also the heel of a loaf of bread. Nor was that the end. For three days a sort of magic reigned in Pepy's kitchen. Ten potatoes, laid out to peel, became eight. Matches and two ends of candle walked out, as it were, on their own feet. A tin pan with a hole in it left the kitchen table and was discovered hiding in Bobby's bureau, when the Fraulein put away the washing.

The governess protested that he heard nothing she told him, and was absent-minded at his lessons. But as she was always protesting about something, no one paid any attention. Bobby drew ahead on his pocket allowance without question, and as his birthday was not far off, asked for "the dollar to grow on" in advance. He always received a dollar for each year, which went into the bank, and a dollar to grow on, which was his own to spend.

With the dollar he made a number of purchases—candles and candlestick, a toy pistol and caps, one of the masks for the carnival, now displayed in all the windows, a kitchen knife, wooden plates, and a piece of bacon.

Now and then he appeared at the scenic railway, abstracted and viewing with a calculating eye the furnishings of the engine room and workshop. From there disappeared a broken chair, a piece of old carpet, discarded from a car, and a large padlock, but the latter he asked for and obtained.

His occasional visits to the railway, however, found him in old Adelbert's shack. He filled his pockets with charcoal from the pail beside the stove, and made cautious inquiries as to the methods of cooking potatoes. But the pall of old Adelbert's gloom penetrated at last even through the boy's abstraction.

"I hope your daughter is not worse," he said politely, during one of his visits to the ticket booth.

"She is well. She recovers strength rapidly."

"And the new uniform—does it fit you?"

"I do not know," said old Adelbert grimly. "I have not seen it recently."

"On the day of the procession we are all going to watch for you. I'll tell you where we will be, so you can look for us."

"There will be no procession."

Then to the boy old Adelbert poured out the bitterness of his soul. He showed where he had torn down the king's picture, and replaced it with one of a dying stag. He reviewed his days at the hospital, and the hardships through which he had passed, to come to this. The king had forgotten his brave men.

During the rest of the day Bobby pondered. No less a matter than the sharing of a certain secret occupied his mind. Now, half the pleasure of a secret is sharing it, naturally, but Bobby, with the right person. And his old playfellow was changed. Bobby, reflecting, wondered whether old Adelbert would really care to join his pirate crew, consisting of Tucker and himself. On the next day, however, he put the matter to the test, having resolved that old Adelbert needed distraction and cheering.

"You know," he said, talking through the window of the booth, "I think when I grow up I'll be a pirate."

"There be worse trades," said old Adelbert, whose hand was now against every man.

"And hide treasure," Bobby went on. "In a—in a cave, you know." Bobby edged closer to the window. "I've got the cave already."

"Oho!"

"Here, in the park. It is a great secret."

"A cave—here in the park?"

"I'll take you, if you'd like to see it." Old Adelbert was puzzled. The park offered, so far as he knew, no place for a cave. It was a plain, the site of the old wall, and now planted in grass and flowers. He himself had been graded and sown. A cave!

"Where?"

"That's a secret. But I'll show it to you, if you won't tell."

Old Adelbert agreed to silence.

Until midday, when the railway opened for business, the old soldier was free. So the next morning, due precautions having been taken, the two conspirators set off. Three, rather, for Tucker, too, was now of the band of the black flag.

Outside the thicket Bobby hesitated. "I ought to blindfold you," he said. "But I guess you'll need your eyes. It's a hard place to get to."

Perhaps, had he known the difficulties ahead, old Adelbert would not have gone on. And, had he turned back then, the history of a certain kingdom of Europe would have been changed. Maps, too, and school books, and the life story of a small prince. But he went on. Stronger than his young guide, he did not crawl, but bent aside the stiff and ungainly branches of the firs. He battled with the thicket, and came out victorious.

He was not so old, then, or so feeble. His arm would have been strong for the king, had not—

"There it is!" cried Bobby.

Not a cave, it appeared at first. A low doorway, barred with an iron grating, and padlocked. A doorway in the base of a side wall of the gate, and so heaped with leaves that its lower half was covered.

Bobby produced a key. "I broke the padlock that was on it," he explained, "I smashed it with a stone. But I got another. I always lock it."

Prolonged search produced the key. Old Adelbert's face was set hard. On what dungeon had this boy stumbled? It was strange.

Bobby was removing the leaf-mold with his hands. "It was almost all covered when I found it," he said, industriously scraping.

The door swung in, silently, as though the hinges had been recently oiled; as indeed they had, but not by the boy.

"It's rather dirty," he explained. "You go down steps first. Be very careful."

He extended an earthy hand and led the old man down. "It's dark here, but there's a room below; quite a good room. And I have candles."

Truly, a room. Built of old brick, and damp, but with a free circulation of air. Old Adelbert stared about him. It was not entirely dark. A bit of light entered from the aperture at the head of the steps. By it, even before Bobby struck a candle, he saw the broken chair, the piece of old carpet, and the odds and ends the child had brought.

Old Adelbert fell curiously shaken.

"None have visited this place since you have been here?" he asked.

"I don't suppose any one knows about it. Do you?"

"Those who built it, perhaps. But it is old, very old. It is possible—"

He stopped, lost in speculation. There had been a story once of a passageway under the wall, but he recollected nothing clearly. A passageway leading out beyond the wall, through which, in a great siege, a messenger had been sent for help. But that was a passage; while this was a dungeon.

The candle was at last lighted. It burned fitfully, illuminating only a tiny zone in the darkness.

"I need a lantern," Bobby observed. "There's a draft here. It comes from the other grating. Some time, when you have time, I'd like to see what's beyond it. I was kind of nervous about going alone."

It was the old passage, then, of course. Old Adelbert stood as Bobby took the candle and held it toward a second grated door, like the first, but taller.

A close examination revealed to old Adelbert two things: First, that a brick-lined passage, apparently in good repair, led beyond the grating. Second, that it had been recently put in order. The passage this, but it was kept in order and repair. For what?

That evening Adelbert called to see his friend, the locksmith in the university police. He expressed, he said, a padlock of which he had lost the key, and which, being fastened to a chest, he was unable to bring with him. A large and heavy padlock, perhaps the size of his palm.

When he left, he carried with him a bundle of keys, tied in a brown paper.

But he did not back to his chest. He went instead to the thicket around the old gate, which was still termed the "Gate of the Moon," and there, armed with a lantern, pursued his investigations during a portion of the night.

When he had finished, old Adelbert, veteran of many wars, one time patriot and newly turned traitor, held in his shaking hands the fate of the kingdom.

* * * * * * *

The Countess Loschek was on her way across the border. The arrangements were not of her making. Her plan, which had been to go afoot across the mountain to the town of Ar-on-Ar, and there to hire a motor, had been altered by the arrival at the castle, shortly after the permission was given, of a machine.

"The matter of passports for the border is arranged, madame," Black Dumbert told her.

"I have my own passports," she said proudly.

"They will not be necessary."

"I will have this interview at my destination alone, or not at all."

He drew himself to his great height and regarded her with cold eyes. "As you wish," he said. "But it is probably not necessary to remind madame that whatever is discussed at this meeting, no word must be mentioned of the committee, or its plans."

Although he made no threat, she had shivered. No, there must be no word of the committee, or of the terror that drove her to Karl. For, if the worst happened, if he failed her, and she must do the thing they had set her to do, Karl must never know. That card she must play alone.

Everything hung on the result of her visit. If Karl persisted, if he would marry Hedwig in spite of the trouble it would precipitate, then indeed she was lost. If, on the other hand, he was inclined to peace, if her story of a tottering throne held his hand, she would defy the committee of ten. Karl himself would help her to escape, might indeed hide her. It would not be for long. Without Karl's support the king's death would bring the terrorists into control. They would have their things to do than to hunt her out. Their end would be gained without her. Let them steal the crown prince, then. Let Hedwig fight for her throne and lose it. Let the streets run deep with blood and all the pandemonium of hell break loose.

But if Karl failed her. She clinched her teeth.

The countess did not sleep. She was, with every fiber of her keen brain, summoning her arguments. She would need them, for she knew—none better —how great a handicap was hers. She loved Karl, and he knew it. What had been her strength had become her weakness.

Yet she was composed enough when, before the sun was well up, the machine drew up in the village before the inn where Mettlich had spent his uneasy hours.

She had expected to go to the lodge, but at that o'clock that night Karl came to her, knocking at the door of her room and entering without waiting for permission.

The room was small and cozy with firelight, the scarlet cloak flung over a chair, made a dash of brilliant color. Two lighted candles on a high carved chest, and between them a plastic figure of Mother and Child, a built-in bed with white curtains—that was the room.

Before the open fire Olga Loschek sat in her low chair. She wore still her dark dress and a veil, ready to be donned at the summons of a message from Karl, trailed across her knee. In the firelight she looked very young—young and weary. Karl, who had come hardened to a scene, found her appealing, almost pathetic.

She rose at his entrance and, after a moment of surprise, smiled faintly. But she said nothing, nor did Karl until he had lifted one of her cold hands, and brushed it with his lips.

"Well!" he said. "And again, Olga!"

"Once again."

She looked up at him. Yes, he was changed. The old Karl would have taken her in his arms. This new Karl was urbane, smiling, uneasy.

"There is nothing wrong, is there?" he said. "Your note alarmed me. Not the note, but your coming here."

"I was anxious. And there were things I felt you should know."

"What things?"

"The truth about the king's condition, for one. He is dying. The bulletins lie. He is no better."

"I said Karl uneasily. "But the chancellor assured me." He stopped. It was not yet time to speak of the chancellor's visit.

"The chancellor! He lies, of course. How bad things are you may judge when I tell you that a hidden passage from the palace has been opened and cleared, ready for instant flight."

It was Karl's turn to be startled. He rose, and stood staring down at her. "Are you certain of that?"

"Certain!" She laughed bitterly. "The terrorists—revolutionists, they call themselves—are everywhere. They know everything, see everything. Mettlich's agents are disappearing one by one. No one knows where, but all suspect. Student meetings are prohibited. The yearly procession of veterans is forbidden. If they trust none, even their old soldiers. The council meets day after day in secret session."

"But the army—"

"They do not trust the army."

Karl's face was grave. Something of the trouble in Livonia had not known. But this argued an immediate crisis.

"On the king's death," the countess said, "a republic will be declared. The republic of Livonia! The crown prince will never reign."

"So you came today to tell me this?"

She glanced up, and catching his eyes, colored faintly. "These are things you should know."

He knew her very well. A jealous woman would go far. He knew now that she was jealous. When he spoke it was with calculating brutality. "You mean, in view of my impending marriage?"

So it was arranged! Finally arranged. Well, she had done her best. He knew the truth. She had told it fairly. If, knowing it, he persisted, it would be because her power over him was dead at last.

"I do not know how far your arrangements have gone. You have at least been warned."

But she saw, by the very way he drew himself up and smiled, that he understood. Relief—that, he doubted her. He questioned what she had said. The very fact that she had told him only the truth added to her resentment.

A recent act of the Saskatchewan Legislature has established an indefinite close season for the elk or wapiti. This animal is now permanently protected throughout its entire range in Canada. This result has been achieved by the continued activities of an ever increasing circle of persons who take a keen interest in the conservation of our wild life. Various conferences of those interested have been held from time to time and their recommendations have been gradually adopted by the various provincial legislatures. Moreover, these conferences have done much to arouse and increase public interest.

The elk or wapiti, one of the largest of North American fauna, once ranged nearly the entire continent in incredibly large numbers, but has now become so greatly reduced that to-day a few scattered bands along the Rockies between Colorado and the Brazeau river and some isolated herds in the forests of northern Manitoba and Saskatchewan comprise the entire wild elk left in North America.

Although now almost exclusively found in forests, the wapiti, which was originally an animal of the open plains and park-like regions, is unable to subsist on browse alone and is dependent, therefore, upon grass and weed range for its food supply. This peculiarity introduces an important element into the problem of its conservation, as the animal is obliged to expose itself more to the hunter than those species which never come out into the open. Consequently, only very drastic measures taken at once will save the wapiti from extinction.

MARKETING OLD HENS

Egg Production Falls Off After Month of May.

Small Cold Storage Plant Both Practical and Profitable on Each Progressive Farm — It Adds to the Comfort of the Family and Increases the Profits — Essential Factors of Construction Explained.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

IN almost every flock there is a percentage of hens who are poor layers. These hens lay so few eggs that they frequently do not pay for the feed they eat and therefore reduce the profits of the better layers. The market price is high for old hens, and where the birds are not good producers it is a good plan to market them fairly early. There are also in most flocks a number of hens that were hatched in 1917 or earlier. Our figures suggest that most hens fall back about twenty eggs annually in their production. It is true that most of this occurs during the winter months, but one must also consider that the number of eggs falls off considerably after the month of May and, moreover, it is not uncommon for July and August to be poor egg-producing months. The price of old hens usually is at its lowest point during the fall of the year, so that in many cases it pays best to sell the old birds not wanted for next year fairly soon, as the decline in price frequently is more than the profit made upon the eggs laid from June to October.

In a word the hen that has bright yellow legs and beak at this season is a poor producer, as is also usually the bird that has a large amount of internal fat or is very full and hard in the space between the end of the breast bone and the tail.

A good laying hen is active. If of the yellow-legged breeds her feet are usually faded, as is also the bill. Her toe-nails are shorter than her poorer laying mates. She appears as if she had worked harder, that is she is not so sleek and fat. Her skin is usually thin and soft. She is busy and not a loafer.

The non-laying hen has a small dry vent whereas the laying hen has a large moist vent.

Small Cold Storage for Every Farm.

Cold storage practice so far has been connected with the large produce warehouses in our towns and cities. These establishments could not do successful business if their plants were not provided with large storage chambers kept cool and in other particulars suitable for the long storage of perishable products of the farm, such as eggs, butter, meat, cheese, fruit, and so forth. Some day, probably not so far distant after all, the farmers may become sufficiently well organized to build and equip mechanical cold storage warehouses of their own, whereby they will be able to have complete control over the products of their own labor until they are disposed of to the consuming public. Personally, I believe the problem of cold storage on the farms should be handled through co-operatively owned warehouses provided with adequate cold storage facilities.

Apart, however, from the question of a cold storage with up-to-date mechanical equipment for the farm or farmers' association as suggested above, there is the problem on almost every farm pertaining to the storage for a few days of small quantities of various foods used on the table from day to day, such as butter, meat, milk, etc. It is certainly a great saving and matter of convenience to have on the farm a small cold storage chamber or refrigerator in which to keep these very perishable articles of food in a good fresh and wholesome condition for use on the table during the warm season of the year. This is made possible by the use of ice, and as it is procurable in almost every district of this country at a reasonable cost, there is no excuse for farmers not laying by in the winter season a few tons in some cheap form of icehouse. In the summer time this ice will be found most useful for cooling the milk and cream, supplying an ice-box or refrigerator in which the butter, for example, may be kept firm, the milk and cream sweet, and the foods in good condition for the table day by day. With ice always so handy and the best of cream available, it is possible for the house-wife to make such delicious and wholesome delicacies as ice-cream, sherbets, and many delightful and cool drinks, all of which are most refreshing and stimulating to the folks on the farm in the hot and busy season of the year. In case of sickness, too, ice is sometimes a necessity. There is no doubt then about the fact that every farmer would find a supply of good ice a great advantage in many ways, whether it be stored in some bin from which it is removed as required or in some form of small ice-cold storage where it could automatically a small refrigerator room adjoining the ice storage room. There are several types of small ice-cold storages suitable for use on the farm. In using these small ice-cold storages, however, it must be kept in mind always that the temperature cannot be maintained lower than about 40 or 45 degrees Fahrenheit scale, which of course is not low enough to keep perishable products like fresh meat longer than a few days, and large quantities of perishable articles must be stored in a small chamber, not too many kinds at one time. In a subsequent article I will deal with a few of the most common and practicable forms of small ice-cold storages for the farm.—R. R. Graham, B.S.A., O. A. College, Guelph.

Storm Stops Hanging.

An eighteenth century execution on Kensington Common was stopped for a time owing to a strange cause. On August 19, 1763, two days before the date of the execution, a heavy fog came over London, accompanied by thunder and lightning and torrents of rain.

These conditions lasted for nearly 48 hours, and many people believed that the last day had arrived. When the time fixed for the execution arrived, the assembled crowd cried shame on the sheriff for hanging a man when the world was coming to an end.

As he persisted in his preparations they burst through the barriers and stopped the proceedings, shouting that the culprit might as well wait a few minutes, when the grand summons would come for all.

The sheriff had to obtain the assistance of a force of soldiers before the execution could be carried out. —London Chronicle.

The Master of Balliol's Letter.

Another gratifying assurance of the resumption of life at Oxford, England, comes in the publication of a letter from the master of Balliol to a member of the British Embassy at Washington. Of the 12,000 young men that Oxford is estimated to have sent to France, the majority who can do so are now, it seems, coming back. Oxford, writes the master of Balliol, is much as it was before the war, cheerful with its many undergraduate life, but the returned students have brought an atmosphere of serious purpose which the old college town did not know five years ago. They have gained intellectually more than they lost by temporary separation from books. The college life which had "dwindled to a thread" resumes its full vigor, with a new spirit in which is making men like the master of Balliol feel that the new college life will be better than the old.

STORING FOR WINTER

Valuable Hints on Canning Fruits and Vegetables.

Vegetables to Be Stored for Winter In Cellars Must Be Sound and Handled Without Bruising—Green Peas, Beans and Corn May Be Successfully Preserved by Placing In Cans and Heating Three Times.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

IN the storing of roots, tubers, cabbage and celery it is a comparatively simple matter if the materials are sound to begin with. Although the decay-producing bacteria, yeasts and molds are always on these they cannot do any injury until the materials are first damaged in some way as by bruising, heating or freezing. After such injury has been done the decay bacteria and molds are able to feed on the damaged tissue and as a result of this action, decay or rot takes place and gradually spreads until all is spoiled.

Therefore in storing roots, tubers, cabbage or celery, it is necessary.—

1st. To have only sound, healthy specimens.

2nd. To handle with care so as not to bruise or otherwise damage the tissues.

3rd. Store in a cool, well-ventilated place where there will be no danger of either overheating or freezing.

Overheating or freezing will usually kill the living tissue of which the roots are composed, after which they will readily decay as a result of the rapid multiplication of bacteria and molds in the dead tissues.

In the preservation of such vegetables as green peas, beans, asparagus and green corn, different measures are necessary. These are green and juicy and if stored in the fresh condition they will either wilt for ferment and rot. This fermentation and rotting is due to the development in the mass of the bacteria and yeasts present on the vegetables. There will be sufficient moisture present in the mass to enable the bacteria to multiply and feed on the material and thus induce the rot.

So in order to preserve such vegetables in the fresh condition the bacteria present have to be all killed and all other bacteria prevented from getting on the material until it is to be used. To get satisfactory results from canning vegetables it is necessary to have—

1st. Good sound, healthy vegetables.

2nd. Good clean sealers with tight-fitting tops and good rubbers.

3rd. Wash the vegetables and fill into the sealers.

4th. Cover with water salted to taste.

5th. Put on the tops and leave slightly loose.

6th. Place sealers in a steamer or boiler half filled with cold water and heat to the boiling point for half an hour.

7th. Remove sealers from boiler or steamer and tighten down the tops.

8th. After 24 hours loosen the tops and return to the boiler or steamer and give another half hour's boiling.

9th. Repeat this process after another 24 hours. Then tighten down the tops and place away.

In the storing of such fruits as apples and pears, which can be stored without canning, we have to prevent the development of molds and yeasts. These are always present on the surface of the fruit. Bacteria do not damage fruits as they do vegetables or meats on account of the sugar and acid nature of the fruits, which is not satisfactory for bacterial development but is just what is needed for molds and yeasts. But even molds and yeasts will not develop on sound apples and pears that are properly stored. If, however, the fruit is damaged in the picking, handling or packing, then the bruised spots enable the mold spores or yeast cells that are on the surface to germinate and grow and multiply, and when once they get a start they will continue to spread even through the sound healthy tissue and from fruit to fruit until the whole pack may be spoiled.

Therefore in the storing of such fruits as apples and pears it is essential:

1st. To have only sound specimens.

2nd. To pack carefully without bruising.

3rd. To store in a cool, well-ventilated place, where they will be neither overheated or frozen.

Such fruits as strawberries, raspberries, plums, peaches, currants, blueberries, etc., which are soft, cannot be kept any length of time without fermenting or moulding unless they are canned.

These fruits may be cooked in a fruit kettle, sugar added to taste, and filled hot direct from the kettle into sterilized sealers removed direct from scalding water. The covers, rings and rubbers should be put on at once direct from scalding water and screwed down tightly.

Another way to preserve such fruits is by the cold pack method. In this method the fruits are not cooked before putting into the cans. Sound fruit not overripe should be used. This is picked over and filled directly into clean sealers. Stone fruit should be pitted.

A syrup of sugar and water sweetened to taste is then filled into sealers so as to completely cover the fruit. The tops, rubbers and rings are put on, but not screwed down tightly. The sealers are then placed in a boiler containing cold water and this is brought to a boil and kept boiling for half an hour. The sealers are then removed and the tops screwed down tightly at once. When cool, store away.—Prof. D. H. Jones, O. A. College, Guelph.

Shortage of Houses.

Houses and apartments seem to be scarce in cities on the other side of the Atlantic as well as here, as a result of the suspension of building during the war. Here are two humorous indications of the shortage. From a British weekly: Lady—How was it you lost your job? Tramp—Well, mum, I was a nartist, I was—used ter paint them "To Let" notices. From a Christiania (Norway) weekly: "Have you a room to let?" "Yes, but I entertain application only from night editors who are out all day."

NET FROCKS ARE QUITE IN FAVOR

Fine White Material Is Richly Combined With Panels of Batiste.

ONE PIECE GOWN STRAIGHT

Garments Are Elaborately Draped and Befrilled—Built of Organdie Cotton and Georgette Crepe In Many Styles.

The warm weather has brought forth a delightful array of the charming dresses of fine white net richly combined with embroidered panels of batiste which are now taking the place of the lingerie gown for the elaborate occasions when such a sumer frock is needed.

The fine round thread nets lend themselves beautifully for this sort of dress and are accepted for informal evening affairs as well as for those formal afternoon occasions such as country club teas and bridge parties. Now and then, observes a fashion correspondent, one finds the embroidery on the net usually done in fine white cotton thread in a small trailing employed to put the dress together and add further richness, for the idea of this sort of frock seems to be to make it as elaborate as possible. Coarse white net is used for the tight slip underneath, over which is hung the first layer of the outside material.

One elaborate gown shows a very skimpy underskirt with three small ruffles of the net placed one above the other upside down along the bottom. The embroidered net is used in an apron drapery for the front of the skirt and has a very wide sash of ciel blue satin ribbon running under the edge of this apron and draping over the hips to be tied in a very wide bow at the waistline in the back. This sash is so wide indeed that it appears almost like a bustle of the satin placed at the back. The bodice is put together with wide filet lace and is quite as elaborate as the skirt, repeating an embroidered panel in a vestee effect. The sleeves are longer than the French models but do not come quite to the elbow.

An Effective Combination.

One of the effective combinations in the elaborate type of dress is displayed in a gown of white organdie and white net combined. The net, embroidered in a very handsome design, forms the upper part of the gown, while the organdie, tucked from waist to hem, is placed in side panels. The finest of Irish crochet lace is used as a trimming on this frock, edging the collar, which is cut in deep points in the front away from the throat, and edging the two pockets placed on the front net panel in the skirt. The short sleeves are also edged with lace.

No sash is used on this dress, and because of the beauty of the design and the material none indeed is needed. One sees any number of dresses with the finely tucked side panels in all sorts of fine cotton materials. As the tucks are as a rule not more than half an inch wide and are placed so closely together as almost to overlap they do not thicken the figure in spite of the fact that they run round instead of up and down.

While the white dress is the preferred now and again one finds a color combination worthy of note, as, for instance, in a soft little one-piece thing which has the upper part entirely of finest plaited chiffon pale pink in color. The lower part of the skirt is made of an embroidered panel of net appliqued onto the chiffon and finished off at the sides and back with enough of the plain net to give the needed width, and let us note, in passing, that skirts are somewhat wider than the spring first showing predicted.

It is well known that this fabrics are not graceful when skimped and the tight straight effects must be studiously avoided for really good and graceful results.

Solves a Problem.

The use of fine net with other materials this summer solves a problem of what to do with the embroidered panels which come from the Philippines, Switzerland or France and which so often are too much for a shirt waist and yet not enough for the dress. Some of the most pleasing results obtained are shown by cleverly putting these panels together with handsome lace, filet or Irish crochet, and filling out all the required spaces with the fine net.

In speaking of this sort of gown one must not forget that the sash is often its most important part, for one is just as apt to find it forming almost the entire back as not, the narrow inch-wide string belts being left for other dresses. If, however, one prefers the narrower type inch-wide moire ribbon with picot edges is used in two strips.

Contrasting with the elaborately draped and befrilled frock we find the straight one-piece frock, almost perfectly straight from neck to hem, much in favor. The chemise frock it is called and is made of embroidered panels of net and lace or embroidered batiste combined with the net. On this type of dress the sash is very wide and tied its full width about the waist as straight and unrelieved by folds or drawing in as a child's. Of course the dress itself buttons down the back and the long lines thus remain unbroken.

Ruffles as Trimming.

Wee ruffles of plain organdie and very narrow edges of Valenciennes lace are used as trimming. In the place of the braiding the organdie is now and then covered with machine stitching, which has the same effect, always done in white, for some reason this is to be a white summer, at least as far as our finest frocks go. This stitching was used a great deal during the winter on hats and turbans and on silk dresses, but as yet this is the first season it has appeared in the thinner fabrics, therefore its presence tells of its being the newest thing.

One of the most delightful fabrics for the less elaborate dress than those described is the cross-barred organdie, so sheer and fine that it is a delight to wearer and beholder endlessly. It is found made up into a rather dressy morning frock of almost shirt-waist simplicity, though the addition of tiny ruffles of footing along the wide low collar, along the sleeves and on the tops of the little pockets placed on the front of the skirt relieves the dress of any plainness whatever. A straight round belt holds in the waist and at the back a wide sash of the organdie is edged the full length, with the footing frilled into place. Accompanying this delightful frock is a wide-brimmed hat of the same material with a soft edge and bows of white net standing up at just the right angle in front.

Organdie Still in Favor.

Of course we are not to think for a moment that organdie has lost its favor, though these finer dresses have pushed it somewhat to one side on dressy occasions. Organdie is delightful to see—on the other person. It belongs by right to youth and slim figures, for its rigidity and its extreme thinness are both against it in the average woman's eyes.

The brilliant colors are much in favor for fine frocks and can be made as simple or as fussy as one desires. One of rose pink has a tight underskirt with a deep hem and over this hang four panels of the pink organdie edged with narrow lace frills. A bib of the organdie with the lace extending from the neck to the bottom of the bib, appearing below the pink satin sash is introduced in the front of the waist to give the popular vestee effect, which seems to rage with the same

In liquid or tablets.

CHATHAM, ONT.—"Being a nurse I have had occasion to use 'Favorite Prescription' quite a lot. I recommend it to my patients and it has been a wonderful help to many of them. I never knew of a case where it failed. I have a patient who is using it now and is doing fine. I have taken it myself and got the very best results. I consider it the best medicine there is for women who are ailing."—Miss. EDITH MOORE, 60 Duke Street.

Etiquette.

Fashions in etiquette are unaccountable and fortuitous. So the assistant editor of Punch, A. A. Milne, finds. "It is the fashion," he says, "to be late for dinner, but punctual for lunch. What the perfect gentleman does when he accepts an invitation for breakfast I do not know. Possibly he has to be early. But for lunch the guests should arrive at the very stroke of the appointed hour." Mr. Milne describes his predicament when, by allowing himself time to be pushed off the first half-dozen omnibuses but actually succeeding in boarding the first one, he arrived at his destination forty minutes ahead of time. He killed the forty minutes, then entered his host's house as the clock was striking one-thirty. "Then I remembered," he concludes, in the British humorist's best vein, "it was Tuesday's lunch which was to be at one-thirty. Today's was at one o'clock."

Lawn Tennis Is Old.

It may be claimed that lawn tennis is at least three centuries old, having been played in 1591 when Queen Elizabeth was entertained at Elvetham, in Hampshire, by the Earl of Hertford. Strutt, quoting from Nichol's "Progress of Queen Elizabeth," tells us that "after dinner, about 3 o'clock, 10 of His Lordship's servants, all Somersetshire men, in a square green court, before Her Majesty's window, did nang up lines, squaring out the form of a tennis court and making a cross line in the middle. In this square they, being stript of their doublets, played, five to five, with handball to the great liking of Her Highness."

Canada's Wounded	149,709
Canada's National Debt	$1,670,263,691
Soldiers' Annual Pensions	$35,000,000

THE WORLD is staggering with debt. Some of the leading countries are verging on bankruptcy.

Five years ago Canada had never dreamed of the financial burden she carries to-day.

Canada entered the Great War with a National Debt of $337,000,000, or $42 per head of population. Canada emerges with a National Debt to date of $1,670,263,691, which is expected to approximate $2,000,000,000 by the end of the fiscal year—or about $250 for every man, woman and child in the country. Interest charges alone will eat up nearly one-half our present national revenue, and soldiers' pensions will have to be provided as well.

Can Ontario Afford to Spend $36,000,000 a Year on Booze?

PREVIOUS to the Ontario Temperance Act the drink bill of the Province approximated $36,000,000 per year, an amount about equal to Ontario's share of the Annual interest on our National Debt. In the face of our financial responsibilities alone, is this the time to repeal the Ontario Temperance Act or relax a single one of its restrictions upon waste of money and man power? To every question on the Referendum Ballot vote—
